Stanley Waterloo.
The "Shoon," a magazine issued by the Press club of Chicago, reprints in a recent number "The Gray Patrol," Stanley Waterloo's best known poem, rediscovered after his death in a forgotten scrap book. It is interesting to note that Doubleday, Page and Company announce for this month Waterloo's last book, "A Son of the Ages," finished just before his death.

Radium in Fiction.

Radium has been making its way not only into the columns of the daily press, but into the pages of the newest fiction. One of the interesting incipents in "Clock of Scotland Yard," Thomas W. Hanshaw's new detective story, concerns half a grain of the mysterious mineral which was concealed in the stuffing of a child's doll.

Mr. Hanshaw's story has other unusual features too. It has been taken up by the moving picture houses, and the book is interestingly illustrated with scenes from the "movie" production.

Should the style of your room furnishings be of the era of Louis XIV, the dailest of rose garlanded paper-es can be found to harmonize, or if you favor heavy Colonial mahogany, or carved Flemish oak, suitable designs for any of these schemes are obtainable. And the latest of all ideas is black wallpaper.

"This is an innovation," remarked the clerk of a prominent wallpaper firm on Broadway, as he spread on the display rack a satin-finished white paper with a handsome Japanese design in black. "With the fall for black carpets we had to get out something to go with them."

"Black and white sounds rather dreary as a color plan for a room," the customer objected.

"Not if it is properly handled. The woodwork must be white, of course, and white enamelled furniture is appropriate. Then a touch of color is needed in the hangings and upholstery. Here is something suitable," and he produced a figured cretonne with a design of birds and flowers in the Japanese style, of dark red, blue and greens on a background of black.

Margaret W. Vandercook, the author of "The Loves of Ambrose," a romantic story just published, is a native of Louisville. She is a member of a little group of Louisville women who some years ago formed a little club calling itself "The Author's Club," and then set out to live up to that title. To see how successfully they have done so one only needs to mention that the membership includes Alice Hagan Rice, George Madden Marin and Annie Fellows Johnson.

Miss Vandercook, after some year's life abroad now lives in New York which she regards as the most inspiring city in the world for literary workers.

She has written several tales for girls but "The Loves of Ambrose" is her first novel.

The Loves of Ambrose.

"I am thinking about Sarah; every woman thinks about the other woman some time," he confessed.

"LittleSarah," Ambrose waited.

"Was you wantin' me to say I didn't know her, honey? 'cause I can't. Would it 'a' seen fairer to you, I wonder, if I hadn't had a heart big enough for lovin' someone before ever I set eyes on you? Sarah was young and needed me, and I reckon I loved her as all I was able then, but there wasn't so much of me to love her with as there is now. You see, Emily darlin' the dark waters has sort 'er passed over me, and I ain't in my springtime no more. Then lovin' and losin' does leaves us a lot, but I ain't never going to care for nobody as I do for you, 'cause nobody else'll ever understand me and match up to me same as you do." But here Ambrose, sighing, pushed back his faded straw-enforced hair with the old plashed gesture.
"Still honey, of anything ever happens, I'd just oblige to tell you, I'm the kind that plumb couldn't live on this earth without lovin' some one"—from "The Loves of Ambrose" by Margaret Vander-cook, just published by Doubleday, Page & Co.

The sample brought out had a two-toned background of a small pattern and overlaid stripes that conveyed the idea of bands of embroidered fabric.

These were deep cream in color and the design in rose and green, and one might have the choice of dull blue or rose for the body of the paper.

"Figured hangings or upholstery would be apt to clash with this paper," cautioned the clerk, "and draperies should be of single tone material matched to the ground color of the paper."

In a Fifth Avenue shop was shown another paper of an old English motif of peacocks, roses and lilies, in dull colors on a black grass paper ground work. It was suitable for den or library, and like all papers having a decided tone would need to be carefully considered in connection with all around it.

"One great treat with the ordinary person's choice of wallpaper," remarked a decorator, "is that they select a thing because it is pretty here and of itself, and fail to stop to think how it will look in their own rooms."

Newest Fabrics
For Summer

COLLINE is one of the new fabrics for summer, and all kinds of embroidered nets play a dominant part, says a New York Times writer. One of the smart frocks made for one who goes to the Florida coast is of white satin with a ragged pink dot worked on the surface. It is effectively trimmed with a wash of black ribbon finished at the back with ends that hang to the knees! this is a fashion that survives without a strong rival.

There is a new kind of cotton crepe that has been received with favor, and the claim is made for it that it does not shrink as did its predecessor, which was liable to go to the wash as a gown and come home a handkerchief. Many of the new frocks shown by the smart dressmakers who have imported models this early in the season are of net, usually embroidered, sometimes in colors, sometimes in white. The latter is much the prettier.

Cotton velours is new, but it may be warm for our dry, hot climate in summer. The materials that are useable in the south have now been adopted in the east and west, for women have gained in the wisdom of sewing the fabric to the conditions.

There is much talk about the new evening by the Albuquerque division of the Order of Railway Employees in Masonic Temple. The arrangements committee of the order has made elaborate preparation for this event and it is pretty certain to be the big social feature of the week.

weave of duvetyne which is more silk than wool, and for that reason is said to wear better. The newest use to which this material is put is as a hat. The color used is always white, and the trimming simple. There is no argument against it on militancy, but there is no argument for it. It is much better looking, and even more refined, especially the watered kind, if it is not more attractive.
